Quarterly Fund Commentary

*Strategy Performance since Launch: 43.23%. Q4 2017: 2.17%.

Despite the dollar continuing to weaken against the euro, the S&P showed significant outperformance of the Eurostoxx as United States (US) politicians put the finishing touches on the tax reform bill while their European counterparts grappled with a series of political tensions from Brexit negotiations to the Catalan independence vote. Elsewhere the strongest regional performance was in Japan, where a resounding victory by Shinzo Abe, bringing with it an expectation of continued accommodative monetary policy and fiscal stimulus, saw Japanese equities hit 26 year highs. The Davy Long Term Growth Fund continued to benefit from our Technology call, which was the strongest performing sector. After almost 4 years in the portfolio, and outperformance of almost 40% against the S&P500, it was decided to cut this position from portfolios in early December. US Treasuries were flat during the period with some positive performance in European Government bonds on the back of a more risk off sentiment given political events and the European Central Bank's (ECB) commitment to extend Quantitative Easing (QE) out to September 2018. We remain negative on fixed income as yields remain stubbornly low against a backdrop of accommodative central bank policy. However as we move later into the economic cycle we will look to increase our fixed income allocation as we still believe fixed income will provide a level of portfolio protection in times of equity market stress.

Investment Committee Commentary

Equities: Equity Markets had a strong Q4. Markets rallied through October and after a brief reversal in November, showed continued positive momentum into the end of the year. The US, Japan and Emerging Markets were the major contributors to Equity Market performance, while Europe was the only significant underperformer, finishing the quarter broadly flat. Politics continued to play a large role in Q4 with the US boosted by significant progress on the tax reform bill while Brexit uncertainty weighed on Europe. Positions in the US, particularly our allocation to US Technology, continued to contribute positively to portfolio performance. The US Tech Call was implemented in the GPS Funds in February 2014 and has since outperformed the S&P500 by almost 40%. In December, the committee took the decision to close this call on the US Technology sector.

Fixed Income: Bonds continued on a similar trend to the previous quarter with Global Government Bonds largely flat while corporate bonds continued to show positive performance. There was some disparity at a regional level during the quarter with European Government Bonds outperforming US treasuries during the quarter as the ECB announced an extension of QE through to September 2018. While the outlook for bond returns remains weak given the level of current yields, bonds will play a greater role in the portfolio as we enter later into the economic cycle and the need for portfolio insurance against an equity sell off increases.

Alternatives: We continue to have a significant allocation to our preferred absolute return managers in order to provide a diversified return next to fixed income and equities. This allocation continued to provide positive performance through Q4 mainly through Ruffer and JP Morgan Global Macro. Following on from Q3, Commodities continued to rise during Q4. Having been significantly down during the year commodities finished the year only marginally negative. Gold was negative on the quarter in Euro terms however given that Gold is priced in USD and the dollar weakened against the euro, much of the decline can be attributed to currency movements.

Cash: Cash remains at a higher weight than we have seen in the past largely due to our views on fixed income. As we move later into the cycle we will look to move some of this allocation into fixed income as protection against an equity market sell off.

Selection of Funds in Focus⁷

Vanguard Information Technology ETF +8.7% - (USD)

As pointed out in our previous quarterly commentary, US technology has the potential to benefit greatly from tax reform given the large cash piles these companies have overseas. Given the progress on this front during Q4, Tech had another strong quarter. After an outstanding 2017 and having outperformed the S&P 500 by almost 40% since inception, the decision was taken to remove the Tech position from our portfolios.

Vanguard US Opportunities Fund +9.7% - (USD)

The Vanguard US Opportunities fund performed strongly over Q4 helped by strong stock selection in the Health Care sector in particular the fund's holding in Nektar Therapeutics which rose by almost 150% during the quarter. The fund's allocation to a number of US Airline stocks also benefited as the sector outperformed the broader market in Q4.

Jupiter European Growth Fund +3.8% - (EUR)

Jupiter's strong performance in the calendar year continued into Q4 as the fund benefited from excellent stock selection in the Information Technology (IT) and Health Care sectors. The fund's holdings in wireless payments company Wirecard and health care specialist Novo Nordisk both added value rising by 20% and 11% respectively.

Morgan Stanley Emerging Markets Fund +5.8% - (USD)

While Morgan Stanley was up 5.8% during the quarter, it was marginally behind the passive emerging market alternative suffering in Q4 due to its allocation to a number of banking stocks. It should be noted that its position in the banking sector has added value over the longer term and Morgan Stanley had significant outperformance over the period despite any ground lost in Q4.

Blackrock Global Equity Income Fund +4.3% - (USD)

While Blackrock trailed the broader market in Q4, performance was broadly in line with its high dividend focused peers as investors were more risk on and moved away from bond proxies. Much of this underperformance can be attributed to a natural tendency to have less Tech positions where many of the larger names tend not to pay dividends. Performance was also negatively impacted by its holdings in a number of mega-cap Health Care names including Astra Zeneca and Sanofi that performed poorly during the quarter.

iShares Global Healthcare ETF +0.6% - (USD)

Having been one of the top performing sectors during 2017 right up until the end of Q3, Healthcare had a disappointing Q4. Similar to Blackrock, when the market takes a more risk on attitude and moves away from more defensive sectors, healthcare tends to suffer. Our thesis for allocating to the sector has not changed and we still expect Healthcare to outperform over the long term given current trends of an ageing population and an expectation of higher demand on Healthcare providers in future as well as the potential to protect the portfolio for the worst of declines in the event of a market sell off.
